Hong Kong restaurants start serving Omnipork

Two Chinese restaurants in Hong Kong have started serving dishes made using Omnipork, a plant-based protein that has the same taste and texture as pork. The dishes include dumplings, and sweet and sour pork.

Omnipork is made of shiitake mushroom, soy protein, pea protein and a mixture of rice. It was launched by David Yeung, the founder of plant-based concept store Green Common. Asian people eat a lot of pork, so he hopes that they will consider eating this new product to reduce their meat consumption.

New project to lift women out of poverty

Hatch, a project started by Social Ventures Hong Kong, aims to lift low-income women out of poverty and bring Hong Kong's manufacturing tradition back to life.

製造業

Social Ventures Hong Kong set up the co-working factory in Kwai Chung. Three local brands share the factory space. They employ women from underprivileged families to sew bed sheets, make soap, etc.

貧困的

Workers are given on-the-job training and have a flexible working schedule. In addition, the factory provides them with a playroom where they can drop their young children off while they go to work.

Peter Parker is just your average college student. Struggling as an intern to make ends meet. Trying to reconnect with an old flame. Battling super powered villains using heroic abilities gained after being bitten by a radioactive spider.

Well okay, maybe not that last one. Luckily, Insomniac Games' Sony PlayStation exclusive Spider-Man is anything but an average game, and makes players feel like they are actually living the double life of the fledging superhero.

An overall winner

Spider-Man delivers on its promise to put you in the shoes of your friendly neighbourhood Spider-Man.

戰鬥

The smooth city traversal, variety in combat, exciting plot and optional extra content will keep you engrossed for the next few weeks.
